slightest Claes Successfully Followed. EDMONTON, Alberta, N. W. T., March 26 .-One of the most remarkable murder cases derer, the O'Brien case in the Yukon, was closed by the hangman at Fort Saskatchewan, Alberta, to-day. In 1900 the Great Northern Railway was engaged in extensive tunnel work at Wyo. Among others who secured work there was a machinist named Leon C. Stainton. He was about 18 years of Employed in the engine room at the tunnel works was Charles B. Bullock, also a native of Michigan. The two became churas. In March, 1901, Bullock's father, mother and two brothers emigrated from Nebraska to the free grant land of Northern Alberta and took up a farm on the Battle River, not far from Ponoka, a station on the Calgary and Edmonton Railway, and about thirty miles by trail from this place Shortly after the arrival of the family in Alberta, Bullock's mother wrote to him at Aspen urging him to come to Alberta and take up a farm before all the land adjacent to the railway was settled. wrote frequently to him in this strain, and Bullock must have shown these letters to young Stainton and induced him to go to Canada. The two quit work at Aspen, drew from the master of the works money was coming to them and left the place, after telling several persons that they were going to Alberta, Canada, to take up land. This was in April, 1901.

then living on his father's farm, but now has a place of his own, went out to search for the nest of a turkey that was missing. Near the Bullock farm there is a clump of which runs past the farm. Thinking this a likely place for a turkey to hide her nest, Edward proceeded to search the brush but had not gone far when he came upon a human head protruding from a shallow grave. The body had evidently been hastily buried some time before when the frost was in the ground, so that a deep grave could not be dug. Word was sent to the authorities at Ponoka, who notified the Northwest Mounted Police post at Wetaskiwin, a neighboring town. Sergt. Hetherington, in charge of the post, rode out to where the body lay. He found a bullethole behind the left ear. The body was that of a young man.

Looking over the clothing, the sergeant found that the buttons on the blue jean trousers bore the name of a Kansas City firm. There was in one of the pockets a curious bunch of matches issued as an firm. There was in one of the pockets a curious bunch of matches issued as an advertisement by a Cheyenne, Wyo. business house, and a metal badge of a street fair held in Kalamazoo, Mich. On the socks and drawers were found curious tin tags which afterward turned out to be tags of a laundry in Ogden, Utah.

With these slender clues the police sergeant set about tracing the murderer. In reference to the Kalamazoo fair badge, he wrote to the chief of police at that place, asking if any one was missing from that town. The answer was that the mother of a boy named Leon Stainton was inquiring for her son, who had left Aspen, in Wyoming, in April and had not afterward been heard of. He then learned Stainton had been a patron of the laundry in Ogden. The officer, instructed by the Department to make the fullest investigation regardless of expense, went to Aspen. There he learned of the departure of Stainton and Bullock for Canada and got his first straight clue to the murderer. Hetherington, when he took the trail to Aspen, put off his scarlet police coat and travelled in civilian garb. He traced Bullock and Stainton from Aspen to Ogden, Utah, to Salt Lake City, to Great Falls, Mon., thence into Canada at Tethbridge, Alberta, and to Calgary, where the two took tickets for Ponoka showed that Charles Bullock had been there in April with a young companion and that they had set out on foot for Bullock's father's. April with a young companion and that they had set out on foot for Bullock's father's. On the way they had a lift from the mail

Bullock reached his father's house alone between 10 and 12 o'clock at night. first intimation that the family had of first intimation that the family had of his approach was the furious barking of the dogs on the place. On entering the house tharies Bullock told his family that a strange man had accompanied him to the gate and had gone on to Battle Lake. Bullock did not take upland. He stayed at his father's from Sunday, April 28, till Wednesday May 1, when he left, saying that he was going to British Columbia to work in the mines. His father drove him to Ponoka where he took the train.

Before leaving he went to a hotel and got an autoharp, which he had previously left there. This autoharp he presented to his father, and that act served to send to his father, and that act served to send him to the gallows, for it was clearly shown subsequently that Stainton had brought this instrument to Ponoka.

Charles Bullock, when he left Ponoka. did not go to British Columbia. He returned to Great Falls. Mon., where under the name of Charles Spencer he went to work on railway construction. Sergit Hetherington started after him, but his change of name taffled him. He sought Bullock through five States, but without success and probably would not have got him but for two mistakes that Bullock made.

our but for two metakes that Bullock made.

William Tirrell was master mechanic at the works at Aspen. Bullock, estensibly to get work, but in reality to discover if any inquiries had been made about Mainton, wrote to Mr Tirrell asking if there was an opening for him at Aspen The letter concluded any news of Bad Mainton? Haven't heard of him since left him in Calgary. The letter was serited from Oreal Falls inquiring anxiously for tidings of her son. This letter Stainton's mother sent to Bergt. Hetherington. It established two facts, that Bullock was in Great Falls and that he had been with Stainton in Calgary. Hetherington went to Great Falls, but having no picture of Bullock and but a poor description could find no trace of him. Then there came into the sergeant's hands another letter. Bullock, in order to throw pursuit off the track, wrote under the name of Charles Spancer to Miss Gill in Kalamazoo, a friend of Stainton, with whom the latter corresponded, to the effect that she would regret to hear that Charles Bullock, Stainton's friend, was dead. The Chief of Police of Great Falls found Charles Spencer on the railway work and brought him in. At the police station he said his name was Charles Spencer.

"You are Charles B. Bullock," said Sergt. Hetherington, "and you are wanted in Alberta for the murder of Leon C. Stainton."

Alberta for the murder of Leon C. Stainton."

"He was my best friend," was all Bullock said. In his baggage were found many articles belonging to Stainton, for the possession of which he could not account. He waived extradition proceedings and was brought here for trial and convicted.

The motive for the crime was robbery. When Bullock left Aspen he had $42; Stainton had over $200. On arriving home Bullock gave his mother $25, his sister-in-law $10, and he had a twenty-dollar gold piece, which he could not get changed at a neighboring ranch store. He had other money, but the Crown proved that he had at least $55, or $13 more than when he left Aspen. The defence attempted to show that the body found was not Stainton's, but this failed.

Sergt. Hetherington spent nearly eight months on the case and the expense to the Crown has been nearly $3,000.

The hangman to-day was one Capt. Binkley from Ohio, but now living near Ponoka. Bullock made no confeasion. The Americans here are very indignant at Capt. Binkley, who qualified for the place by showing he had officiated at 143 executions in Ohio. He is a neighbor of the Bullocks.
